It is housed in the monastic buildings of the Madre de Deus Convent, which after renovation following the Great Earthquake had its interior turned into one of the most magnificent in the city. The splendor and opulence of the chapel dedicated to St. Anthony and the chapter house is particularly impressive.

This was Europe's first great example of neoclassical design and urban planning, and one of the finest European architectural achievements of the age.

Guests will observe the beautiful architecture of the Aqueduct and drive under its arches which will give a great perspective of the Aqueduct. With its impressive height, the "Águas Livres" Aqueduct is the most remarkable and complex hydraulic engineering water supply systems of the 18th century, and an interesting attraction. Built in 1746 to bring the city its first clean drinking water, Lisbon's remarkable aqueduct is made up of 109 stone arches, which were the tallest stone arches in the world when they were built. It is possible to walk across the aqueduct's both walkways, quietly and without any effort. During the walk, you are able to cross the aqueduct from one path to another and see the tunnel where the waters would flow to Lisbon. The views are amazing on both sides: the bridge, the river, Monsanto Park and the city's urban sprawl.
